Shannon Koen

July 23, 2016

North Texas boasts two of Forbes' America's Fastest Growing Cities of 2015 – Dallas (#3) and Fort Worth (#8) – due in large part due to the combination of a steady stream of corporate relocations and job seekers taking advantage of Texas' economic growth. Further, over the last 12 months, median home prices in North Texas have risen 14 percent, while the number of days a home is on the market has decreased 13 percent. Candidly, at this time in North Texas, there is not enough supply to meet demand.

Shannon Koen is the agent of choice to navigate the sometimes chaotic and seemingly ungovernable arena of real estate transactions in this market. She has the skills, knowledge and passion to advocate for her clients during the buying and selling process, corporate relocations, or new home construction. Her background in education has trained her to evaluate objectively, adapt her focus based on the needs of her clients, and to view every detail as an important piece of the greater whole.

A Texas native, Shannon received her undergraduate degree from Tarleton State University and is especially connected to North Texas through immediate and extended family, friends, and professional and personal associations. Her individual engagement in home, community and the DFW market allow her a depth of understanding of area neighborhoods, school districts and on-going economic development across the metroplex.

Organized and tenacious, Shannon has been praised by her clients for her resourcefulness, veracity and dedication. Her business tenet is very simply to assume the client's priorities as her own. Shannon uses experiences from her professional and personal journeys to ensure that the client's real estate experiences are positive and their objectives are met.
